Sessions

10:00 AM – 12:00 PM: Business Email Compromise, Ransomware and Social Engineering: CPE Credits: 2 (TB)

Fraud is the intentional act of deception carried out to secure an unfair or lawful gain, often involving financial or personal benefits. It can occur in various forms-such as identity theft, financial statement fraud, insurance fraud, or cyber fraud and affect individuals, businesses, and governments alike. Perpetrators often exploit weaknesses in systems or human behavior, making fraud a persistent threat that requires robust detection, prevention, and response strategies.

The discussion of fraud typically involves analyzing how and why it occurs, the mechanisms used by fraudsters, and the legal or ethical implications. It also emphasizes the importance of internal controls, audits and regulatory frameworks and the use of technology like artificial intelligence to detect suspicious patterns. By prioritizing ethical behaviors and reinforcing trust among employees, partners, and customers, companies can significantly reduce their exposure to fraud and safeguard their long-term success.
